Free at Last

Contemporary movies like Office Space parody work as invading every corner of our lives. But does it really? While yesterday's factory worker may have found it easier to separate work from play, work schedules were often rigid and workplace rules draconian. Employees were expected to punch in on time, work straight through to a specified break without talking—or, sometimes, even chewing gum—and generally toe the line 'til the 5 o'clock whistle blew. Today, in an economy increasingly based on human capital, workers have more say in how they do their jobs.

1886 Corset Factory Rules

1. Hours of work will be from 7 A.M. to 12 P.M., and from 1 to 6 P.M.
2. Employes [sic] who are five minutes, or over, late will be fined. Those coming after 8 A.M. and 2 P.M. will not be admitted at all.
4. ... anyone bringing eatables of any description (candies included) into the workroom will be fined; in the case of repetition will be discharged.
6. Talking, singing or visiting each other during working hours is strictly forbidden. (Fined at discretion of forewoman.)
9. Only on presentation of an excuse ticket at the door will employes be permitted to leave the room during working hours.
12. Two weeks wages will be retained from each employe which will be payable to the employe provided he or she has complied with rule 13.
13. Employes intending to quit our employ must give a written notice of two weeks to the office. Employes leaving our employ before the expiration of six months, or without giving such notice, will forfeit the amount of their first two weeks wages.
