Notice 02-25

TO: The Chief Operating Officer of each financial institution and others concerned
in the Eleventh Federal Reserve District

SUBJECT

Announcing 2003 FedLine[®] for the Web Fees

DETAILS

The Federal Reserve System recently established fees for accessing financial services via FedLine for the Web. Although these fees will not take effect until January 1, 2003, we are announcing them now to help your institution budget for next year. In the meantime, you can sign up to use FedLine for the Web for the rest of 2002 at no cost.

FedLine for the Web fees offer your institution flexibility and choice and reflect the emerging Internet industry practice of pricing for access or “subscription” rather than for the number of terminals or copies of application software. Customers who access only Treasury and/or cash services on FedLine for the Web will not incur these fees.

The attached chart outlining FedLine for the Web fees is provided to help you estimate your cost for using these services in 2003. Below is an overview of the fees:

One-time setup fee	$50 per subscriber (individual user)
Subscription fees
Institution-level fee	$25 per month
Per subscriber fee	$10 per month

Institutions currently using Web services and others who sign up before July 1, 2002, will not be charged setup fees. If you sign up for Web services on or after July 1, 2002, we will delay the setup fee until January 1, 2003, so that your institution can try these new services at no cost.

Beginning January 1, 2003, new subscribers of FedLine for the Web will be charged setup fees at the time of enrollment, and all subscribers will incur monthly subscription fees.

We are confident you will benefit from using FedLine for the Web services. However, if for any reason you choose to discontinue Web use before the end of 2002, you will not be charged.
