New Staff at the Institute

Everett Grant

Research Economist

Grant joined the Globalization and Monetary Policy Institute of the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas in 2015. His research interests include international economics, macroeconomics, economic crises, finance and computational economics. His recent research has focused on cross-country economic crisis contagion, the drivers of exchange rates and the evolution of the wage premium paid to financial sector workers. Before joining the Bank, Grant spent six years working at Bridgewater Associates, a hedge fund focused on global-macro investment strategies. He has a BA in mathematics and economics from Colgate University and an MA and a PhD in economics from the University of Virginia.

Arthur Hinojosa

Research Assistant

Hinojosa has been a research assistant for the Globalization and Monetary Policy Institute since June 2015. Hinojosa served four years' active duty in the United States Marine Corps. He graduated from the University of Arkansas in 2014 with a BSBA in business economics with minors in finance and mathematics. Hinojosa received an MA in economics in 2015 from the University of Texas at Austin.

Kelvinder Virdi

Research Assistant

Virdi has been a research assistant for the Globalization and Monetary Policy Institute since July 2015. He graduated from the University of California, San Diego, in 2015 with a BA in economics. He is originally from Santa Clara, California.
